Quite an enjoyable time was had at the Town Hall on the night of the 22, during the Patterson Commencement. There were eleven graduates, the largest class ever graduating in White-oak township. The exercises began by singing "America." All joined in singing. The invocation by Rev. Meador was followed with music by the Quartette. The first declamation was delivered by Miss Nellie Cornett entitled "Poor Little Joe." Miss Nellie spoke well and understood her subject thoroughly. The audience next listened to singing by Miss Rosa Reed and accompaniment played by her father. Next declamation by Burley L. Carrier, entitled "The Specter Warrior." This was well delivered and appreciated by the audience. We next listened to an essay "Morning, Noon and Night," by Miss Nellie Louderback. The next was a declamation by Miss Blanche Sauer, entitled "Little Christel," which was spoken in a clear voice and listened to with great attention. We next listened to music by Misses Lacy and Minnie Fenwick followed by a declamation entitled "The College Oilean," by Miss Ruth Haller, this was greatly appreciated. Miss Flossie Gallett then recited "Old Uncle Jake," which was loudly applauded by the audience. Five of the bright little boys here then sang "My Little Farm," their singing and whistling was fine. The organ accompaniment was played by Mrs. Mary Gallett, followed by great applause. Ray Druhot then recited "Death and Honor," this was a good subject and was spoken in a way that was a pleasure to hear. Clarence Roselot then recited "Dollars and Sense." This was well delivered and showed that he had carefully studied his subject and understood it well. After this speaking we had the pleasure of listening to a piece of music played by Miss Lacy Fenwick and sung by Minnie Fenwick, entitled "At the Husking of the Corn." This was greatly appreciated. Then followed another good declamation by Harley V. Stanforth, entitled "The Lapse of Time." Harley is a good speaker and showed no fear but spoke in a straight forward way. The little boys then favored us with another one of their songs "It's a way we have." We then listened to an essay on "Education" by Miss Hazel Pettithory. This was a fine production and was listened to with rapt attention. Then the Male Quartet gave us one of their fine selections. The last one of the class to speak was Miss Maud Nave, who recited "My Mother's Picture," this was well delivered and we can say that we certainly have a right to be proud of our class of graduates for they all give promise of becoming shining lights in the educational field. We now heard from the mixed quartet. Their song was about "Picked Pumpkin eater," and caused a great deal of laughter. We then had the great pleasure of listening to the class address delivered by Prof. C. A. Puckett, of the Lynchburg schools. His address was an excellent one and we believe the graduates can never forget some of the beautiful things he told them. The large audience behaved in a creditable manner and showed great respect to the speaker as well as to the graduates by keeping quiet. At the close of the address we heard a good selection from the Male Quartet, after which Rev. W. O. Cornett pronounced the benediction and the commencement exercises were ended.

Orange Cotterill, of Dayton, ended his single blessedness by taking Miss Nellie Redkey for his wife. The marriage ceremony was performed at the home of the bride's parents, Hon. and Mrs. H. B. SOCIETY GIRL TO RESCUE.

Miss Roebeling Throws Aside Embroidery to Give Lesson to Firemen in Life-Saving.

Trenton, N. J.—After saving her father's thoroughbred horses from being burned to death, Miss Emily Roebeling, daughter of Charles G. Roebeling, a leader in society, stopped a runaway fire engine and assisted the firemen to couple up a line of hose which had burst.

Just before her crowded hour Miss Roebeling was alone in her home doing fancy work. She saw smoke coming from her father's stable and, laying aside her embroidery hoop, rushed out to the stable to find the horses frantic with fright.

The animals were rearing and plunging about in their stalls, but without a moment's hesitation the plucky young woman entered the stalls and, untying the halter straps, led them out of the burning barn to a place of safety.

"I never was afraid of horses," she said, when congratulated upon her work by friends.

Then the firemen came, and as one of the engines began pumping a section of hose burst, throwing a deluge of water over the horses attached to a chemical engine.

The driver lost his reins and the horses with the engine bolted across the lawn. Miss Roebeling saw them coming, and, hastily tying the horses she was leading, grabbed the runaway fire engine horses by the bits and brought them to a stop.

The excited firemen did not seem able to cut out the broken section of hose, and while they were arguing about it Miss Roebeling went over and "kinked" the section of hose below the break and with the aid of a fireman held it until the section with the break was taken out and the two ends of the hose coupled up.

When the firemen put out the fire Miss Roebeling took her father's horses back to the stable and then took up her embroidery again.

PRESS CLAIM 39 YEARS OLD

Government Is Called Upon by Widow of Captain to Pay for Sinking a Brig in 1866.

Boston.—An interesting claim against the government on account of the collision of a Maine brig and a United States gunboat 39 years ago has been entered in the United States district court, the claimant being Mrs. Sarah V. Small, of Brookline, wife of Capt. Frederick A. Small, who was master of the brig; Carl A. Gustav L. and Frederick Small, residuary legatees under the will of Capt. Small; George A. Jewett, of South Portland, who was mate of the ship; his wife, who was on board at the time, and Sarah M. Pennell, widow of one of the principal owners.

The brig Olive Frances sailed on July 24, 1866, from Boston for Little Glace bay, Cape Breton, under charter to carry coal to Bath, Me. She proceeded until Monday morning, June 30, when about 40 miles from Sambro light, on the Nova Scotia coast, she was run down by the United States gunboat Winoski. The brig filled and capsized. The gunboat picked up the crew.
